OER-NSA FAMILIARIZATION PROGRAM

25X1
The most significant development in the field of the CIA-NSA training relationship in recent years was the establishment and conduct of a major familiarization program at the behest of the Office of Strategic Research. The program was conducted in three phases, two at NSA and one at CIA. At least fifty CIA analysts and about seventy NSA analysts participated in one or more phases of the program.

Critiques of the program were prepared for each phase by the office primarily concerned in the host agency. These critiques were based on student responses to questionnaires. A review of these critiques suggests that the greatest benefit was derived from the informal exchanges associated with the analyst-to-analyst visits. Considerable criticism was directed to the formal class type instruction in the first session of Phase I training at NSA. Modifications in the program for the second session resulted in responses indicating greater student satisfaction.
